MAYSVILLE, KY.

OUT OF TOWN.

Close the shutters, Mary, darling:
Close the shutters, and leave no crack;
Put our pet imported starling
In the second story back.

Put the blinds at every casement
Down unto the window-sill;
Take the posies to the basement,
Take him there and keep him still.

Swahe in dull brown-linen covers
All the parlor-furniture;
Tell the cook to see her lovers
At the door with air secure.

Set us then our meals diurnal
In the back room gently down—
Put it in the Fashion Journal
That "The Smiths are out of town."

OSTRICH-HUNTING.

Exciting Episodes on the African Prairie—
How the Craziest of Game is Driven Into the Meshes of the Hunters' Nets.

Captain James Fewsmith, and his boon companion, Thomas Harrod, recently returned from an ostrich hunt beyond the Transvaal, in the neighborhood of the Orange River. The Captain is a veteran, and his account of a little experience of himself and Harrod is interesting. The game inhabited the dry portions of Africa from Egypt and the Barbary States to the Cape, and were he not the most idiotic game in the world, it would have been almost impossible to capture or shoot him. The ostrich's sight and hearing are wonderfully keen, and he can run at the rate of a mile in two minutes for a long time, but, with every advantage on his side, his own stupidity proves his destruction.

Captain Fewsmith and his friend were well mounted, but as the day was extremely hot, they picked their animals under shade-trees and threw themselves on the ground to smoke and rest until the sun should descend lower in the sky. A half-hour later, Captain Fewsmith called attention to a curious visitor approaching. As the two hunters rose to their feet they perceived that he was a bushman, without any covering for his head, with a very scanty shirt, no foot gear, and with his trousers slung over his shoulder. The legs of these trousers were filled with something which expanded them almost to the bursting point. When the grinning native came up he carefully let down the heavily weighted garment and drew out an ostrich egg, which he presented to Captain Fewsmith.

"Let us see how many he has," said Harrod, who proceeded to find out the capacity of the rather floppy trousers legs. The owner, on coming upon the ostrich nest, had doctored his lower garment, torn off a strip from the waist-band, with which he tied the bottom of each trouser leg, and then he had proceeded to despoil the nest with as much enthusiasm as an American archer often shows in gathering specimens for his collection.

There were six of these eggs in one leg, seven in the other, while the body of the garment contained a round dozen more. When it is made known that each egg weighed about three pounds, and was equal in point of nourishment to twenty-four hen's eggs, it will be seen that not only was the capacity of the trousers tested to the utmost, but a valuable supply of food was secured to the bushman and his family. The hunters had taste ostrich eggs before, but found them so strong that they did not break the shell of the one left them by the bushman, who went away shortly after, but as they were in an ostrich country, they remounted their horses, later in the afternoon, and galloped at an easy pace in search of game, well aware, from previous experience, of the difficulties in the way of success. Turning the heads of their horses toward a sandy ridge, two or three miles away, they rode along until the base was nearly reached, when they reigned up abruptly at sight of an ostrich nest, almost in their very path. The Captain got down from the saddle to examine the curious sight a little more closely. It was simply scooped out of the sand a foot and a half deep, and fully five feet across. The eggs stood on end, so as to occupy the smallest possible space. As these all looked alike, it was hard for any one to count them, if several feet distant. Like the gilded pipes of the organ in church which one keeps trying to enumerate during the sermon, they are so similar that they blend and run together so that the eye has hard work to make sure of the number. "The cunning native knows how to keep the supply of eggs going; instead of gathering in all like that bare-legged fellow, he will skillfully draw out the eggs with a long stick until two or three are left. If he does his part well the mother when she returns will not notice that three are less than a dozen, and will continue laying all through the season—that is, from June to October."

The friends now rode to the top of the ridge, halting and taking a careful survey of the country before them; the result was one that awakened hope and delight. Less than a half mile distant was a ridge parallel with the one on which they had halted, and between the two ran a valley several miles in extent.

Near the middle of this two ostriches were grazing, while a gentle breeze was blowing from the east. Instead of separating and attempting to flank the birds, the horsemen rode at a leisurely gallop in the direction of the eastern end of the valley. This was narrower than the opposite opening, which therefore offered the very best chance in the world for the birds to escape, for they could speedily dash through it into the open country beyond, where they would be safe against harm during that afternoon at least; but it is on such occasions that the ostrich gives an exhibition of stupidity which approaches the marvelous. The sight of the hunters making for the eastern opening of the valley seemed to give the ostriches the belief that their enemies were trying to cut off their only avenue of flight, and instead of turning the opposite way, they instantly started on their long, swift trot toward the point at which the hunters were also heading with much the start of the birds. The two ostriches displayed still more marked failure to "grasp the situation." The singular chase could not have lasted long, when the birds, running almost side by side, must have seen that the horsemen were sure to reach the opening ahead of them. But, not only did they refuse to turn back, but they also failed to swerve in the slightest degree from their course on which they had started; they simply increased their speed, and with their ungainly necks outstretched, struck a two-minute trot and sped away for the most dangerous point on the horizon. As the pursuers were quite certain of their game, they now slackened their gait somewhat, and each fired a shot. The bullet of Captain Fewsmith went through the brain of his bird, which ran a few steps in a wild staggering way and then went down, its head plowing quite a furrow in the sand. Leaping from his saddle, the Captain hurried forward and cut the throat of the ostrich, so as to end its sufferings.

It was almost at the same instant that Harrod discharged his rifle, and, seeing the bird acting strangely, he was confident of having inflicted a mortal wound, and was scarcely behind the Captain in springing to the ground to dispatch his prize.

But he made a slight mistake, for when he placed himself directly in the path of the bird and held his hunting knife ready to give him the finishing touch, the ostrich seemed to brighten up. Before the gentleman suspected his intention he delivered a terrific kick which tumbled the hunter over on his back as if struck by a falling tree. The ostrich is capable of kicking with such force as to kill the panther or jackal, and he does it by throwing his foot forward, the same as a man. In the present instance Mr. Harrod fell so quickly that Captain Fewsmith ran forward in alarm. Assisting him to his feet, he was found to be little injured, although he declared, with a grim smile, that he knew more about ostriches than he ever did before.

The bird kept on trotting straight away until he vanished in the twilight and was seen no more, while the hunters were glad enough to go into camp and wait till the morrow.

There are different methods of hunting the ostrich. Every school-boy recalls the picture of the bushman awkwardly disguised as one of the birds, who is thereby enabled to approach close enough to a herd to bring down several with his bow and arrow. In other cases, the hunter lies in wait and uses poisoned arrows. In North Africa, the game is pursued on horseback, the chase being kept up for several days, until the bird is literally run down and incapable of going further or making resistance. Sometimes a herd is forced into the water, where it is an easy matter to knock them in the head. The European horsemen prefer to conceal themselves near pools and springs where the bird is in the habit of coming to drink, so as to shoot him unawares. The value of the ostrich, of course, lies in its plumage. These feathers are very costly, it rarely happening that more than two dozen marketable ones can be obtained from a single bird. March or April is the best season, as the ostriches have recovered their moult and the feathers are elastic and vigorous. It is necessary also that the feathers should be plucked from the body of the bird before it gets cool, or they will be found to have lost much of their glossiness and disposition to curl. —Natal Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Pennsylvania and New York are the only States in the Union containing over a million males of the voting age, twenty-one years and over. Two States, Minnesota and Wisconsin, have more foreigners than natives, twenty-one years of age and over. —Chicago Journal.

"I NEVER pretend to know a thing that I do not," remarked Brown. "When I don't know a thing, I say at once, 'I don't know.'" "A very proper course," said Fogg; "but how monotonous your conversation must be, Brown!"

PITH AND POINT.

—In some parts of South America the banana skin is converted into a material of which ladies' dresses are made. This is probably the kind that the lady slips on easy. —Yonkers Statesman.

—You can never entirely discourage a New Jersey man. When he comes down to his last dollar he picks up a spade and goes out to dig up some of Kidd's buried treasure. —Detroit Free Press.

—"Is this my train?" asked a traveler at the Grand Central Depot of a lounging. "I don't know," was the reply. "I see it's got the name of some railroad company on the side, and expect it belongs to them. Have you lost a train anywhere?" —N. Y. Graphic.

—It is stated that a railroad brakeman has become an operative tenor, and has been engaged for next season at $500 a week. He won't have to learn the Italian language, you see. He has merely to speak his lines as he does the names of stations and everybody will think he's speaking Italian. —Boston Post.

—The peculiar costume of the dwellers in Arizona is thus graphically described by a "tender-foot;" "In ordinary weather he wears a belt with pistols in it. When it grows chilly he puts on another belt with pistols in it, and when it becomes really cold he throws a Winchester rifle over his shoulders."

—Seth Green says fish can not shut their eyes. Fogg says this explains why they always succeed in keeping off his hook. Whenever he goes fishing, the fish are all eyes and no mouth, and every eye wide open. He thought they kept their eyes open out of pure cussedness; but now that he knows that they can't help it, he simply despises where he hated them before. —N. Y. Independent.

—Well, my little girl," said a New Haven gentleman, to a friend's "preciousness," "aren't you going to sing for me?" "No, sir. I'm not a singer." Now, I thought you were a little singer. "Oh, no! I only sing a little to my dolly." "But I'll be your dolly." "You're too big. I guess sister Jennie wouldn't mind if you was hers. She said you was just splendid." Sudden rattling of the dishes in the back room—where Jennie was lousy. —New Haven Register.

—"The latest agony," says Jemmy, "is the way I felt this morning. My wife asked me for a XX bill—a twenty, you know—and I cut the matter short by telling her that it could not be did, for the simple reason that I had only a matter of a dollar or so in my pocket. 'I knew you'd tell me that,' she said, 'and it's true, too.' And, as I looked up in amazement, she added: 'I looked in your pockets last night. I've got the twenty.' Oat boys, how I felt! But what could I do?"

—"Heart-disease," said Jemmy, as he assisted Patrick to up-end a barrel of cement, "heart-disease is one of the worst diseases. Some people never know they have it till they drop down dead." Thrive for you, Jemmy," replied Patrick; "and those people who know that they have it have to be mighty careful wid themselves. I knew a man worst that had it, and he was always obliged to drop work about five minutes before he felt it coming on." —Somerville Journal.

Two-Handed Swords.

The claymore, once famous in Scottish history, was a very long sword, with a hilt so large that it could be grasped by both the hands of the warrior who wielded it, and when this tremendous weapon was swung around by any of the brave

"Scots, wha ha' wi' Wallace bled," "Scots, wham Bruce has aften led," there was every reason for the opposing soldiers to want to get as far away as possible. Long, two-handed swords were in use in various parts of Europe during the Middle Ages, but it is from Scotland that we have heard the most about them.

Some of the German swords, used by the mercenary soldiers in the French religious wars, were enormous two-handed weapons, with sharp points, jagged edges, and great spikes near the base of the blade; but these heavy swords were used only by soldiers who were uncommonly strong and skillful; for any awkwardness on the part of a man swinging such a tremendous blade was apt to inflict as much injury on his companions as on the enemy. Some of the long swords of the Middle Ages were used more for show and ceremony than for actual service. The sword of Edward the Third, which is preserved in Westminster Abbey, is seven feet long, and weighs eighteen pounds. This, it is said, was carried before the King in processions, and was probably never used in any other way. —John Leuees, in St. Nicholas.

The First Kentucky Railroad.

The Louisville Commercial in a history of railroads in this state gives the following account of the building of the Lexington and Frankfort Railroad which is still remembered by many still living in this city.

Kentucky, half a century ago, was the home of some worthy pioneers in almost every department of invention and progress. Perhaps in no other state was there such a general interest on the subject of railroads as began to exist here about 1820. At that time the subject of improved highways was attracting special interest on account of the extensive turnpikes in progress of construction. In 1829 a company of Lexington capitalists, with $1,000,000 capital, were incorporated by the Legislature as the Lexington and Ohio Railroad Company, for building a road from Lexington to Louisville, the cars to be drawn by horses. In view of this fact Kentucky cannot strictly claim to have built a railroad as early a date as is commonly recorded. This was the first attempt at a railroad in the state, while there were in operation in America only twenty-three miles of railroad. In April, 1831, the surveys for the new road were completed, and on October 22 of that year the first railstone was laid at Lexington with great ceremony, in the presence of a large concourse of citizens and strangers, Governor Metcalf officiating. Work on the road progressed slowly however so that the line was not completed to Frankfort, a distance of twenty-nine miles until January 25, 1835.

STEAM FOR RAILROADS.

In March, 1831, Joseph Bruin, a Lexington mechanic who had constructed the first locomotive designed by Barlow, exhibited at Frankfort a model railway locomotive and coach. The belief was expressed on that occasion that carriages and heavy loads could be drawn as certainly and easily by steam as boats could be propelled by the same power. Horses continued to be used on the Lexington and Ohio road until 1834. The introduction of the locomotive in that year was celebrated by a grand ball at Lexington. The first through train from Lexington to Frankfort, on the date above given, finished the distance in two hours and twenty-nine minutes.

Travel on the new road was endured more as a novelty than enjoyed as a luxury. The track was laid with flat rails, spiked to stone sills, and much trouble and danger was caused by one end of thin iron bars rising up when the locomotive wheels pressed upon the other. The spikes often projected upward to such an extent that it was necessary to stop the trains until a man could leave the engine and drive them down with a hammer. The form of the coaches was the same as that of the stage coaches of that day, and similar to the style still prevailing on English railways.

The Singhalese.
The Singhalese women are well made and good-looking, often handsome; they dress very much the same as the men and are highly industrious. In fact, it may be said of them as it used to be of the Peruvian women in contradistinction to the men of that nation, that "the mare is the better horse," for most of the family cares devolve upon her and she generally discharges them with great spirit and much loving kindness. In fact, if the Singhalese men were as smart and capable as the women, they would be a noble race. As it is, they are good husbands and fathers, and though hating work, are yet possessed of such remarkable acquisitiveness as generally results in their accumulating considerable property, or at least gaining a comfortable maintenance. To a certain extent they are scholarly and take great pride in devising intricate philosophical abstractions. To this penchant I attribute much of their fondness for Buddhism, which creed abounds in such puzzling and obscure theories as sober reason abandons in despair. As handicraftsmen and artificers they possess considerable merit, but have not sufficient patiently directed application to be really ingenious. Their greatest proficiency lies in the line of carpentry, jewelry and cabinet work, in which branches, if furnished with good patterns, they perform very well. In a few instances the jewelry work from their own designs is excellent, but generally not to be admired, as their taste is undeniably bad, they having no idea whatever of the harmonizing colors and vice versa; hence in dress the very darkest of them will to a certainty don sky-blue, green or other trying tinted raiment, and among their jewels formerly it was not uncommon to find red, blue, green, yellow and colorless stones all mixed together in one setting. Their tortoise-shell work is very fine indeed, in fact it surpasses that of any other people I know, and is mostly real, the Singhalese not having yet well learned the Japanese trick of manufacturing it from horn. Having thus unsparingly revealed the worse traits of these people's characters, I think I may now enumerate some of their virtues, beginning with cleanliness. They are a cleanly people in their habits, and very particular about their food; their fondness for neat and comfortable houses is intense, and they are the only intertropical people I have seen who are fully capable of adopting a pure Western taste and style in furnishing their dwellings. In fact a stranger introduced, without notice of where he was going, into a wealthy Singhalese man's house would not mistrust, either from its exterior appearance or internal appointments, that he was in any other than a European gentleman's dwelling; and when made conscious of the real facts by the appearance of the owner with his kindly, self-possession manner, intelligent speech and graceful courtesy, he would have to admit that the personal style of the occupant was quite in keeping with the exquisite establishment. As a rule, they are also temperate in the use of spirituous drinks, and are endowed with a natural frugality which protects them from impecuniosity. Though not a gallant people, such things as love matches being almost unheard of among them, they generally observe such true allegiance to their marriage obligations as completely preserves their families from scandal. And they are so almost ridiculously fond and inordinately proud of their children as to humble themselves to them, it being the rule, especially among the middle and lower classes, for children, when walking out, clothed in the finest raiment procurable, to take precedence of their parents, who, in humbler garb, stride on in the rear of their gaily decked offspring. It may also be said to their credit that the children fully reciprocate the loving kindness of their parents, and seem always to pay a dutiful regard to their welfare and wishes. I should say, therefore, that, as a domestic people, the Singhalese take a high place in the human family; and, although they do fail in some of the higher traits of civilization, nevertheless there are excuses for them, inasmuch as for centuries prior to European acquaintance they were harassed and oppressed by pillaging hordes of greedy Malabar invaders, who made their very existence so precarious and burdensome that it was only supportable by a system of subterfuge and chicanery; and the system naturally becomes so ingrained in the natures of their posterity as not to be easily eradicated, even by contact with Europeans, more especially those who, after all, are but quasi adventurers themselves, and not the most likely people in the world to shed a purely elevating influence around them.—Colombo (Ceylon) Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

A Hardshell Parable.
There are other kinds of liquors than those drank at bars, as an old Hardshell minister once alluded to in this manner: "There's the likker of mallas that many of you drinks to the drugs, but you're sure to sweeten it with the sugar of self-justification. There's the likker of avris that some keeps behind the curtain for constant use, but they always has it well mixt with the sweeten' uv prudence and economy. There's the likker of self-luv that sum men drink by the gallon, but they always puts in lots of the shugar of take-keer-of-number-one. An' lastly, there's the likker uv extorsion, which man sweetens according to circum-
